SENT IN A LETTER.

For hours she sat with paper spread
Beneath her hand as if to write,
But not a single word she'd said
Upon that page of purest white.
An easy task it was to her
With scarcely an effort to quash
Then wherefore does the pen not stir?
And why this most attractive blush?

Had common friendship urged her pen,
So fit on a friend, I engage,
The little child had traveled then,
And covered over many a page.
But, ah! It is no easy task
For this dear maiden to hide
A letter—and her heart unasked
When 'tis a lover bids her write!

A sentence may so much convey!
One word a volume may express
To those who read it far away,
And make the meaning more or less.
So she lingers over the page,
On which, in words of living light,
Her heart has written to assuage
Its pain—her task to expedite.

She blushes as she reads the lines,
And—modest maiden—seems to think
As she at last her pen resigns,
That they are writ with common ink.
And on the page, still pure and white,
She presses one long, lingering kiss,
And trusts that he who made her write
The letter will not read amiss.

He breaks the seal with eager haste,
"What! Not one word? Oh, yes, I see!
That appears a barren waste
Betrays my darling's love for me!
When tongue or pen their aid refuse
The heart is then most eloquent.
So, love, your letter I peruse,
And take the kisses that you sent."

—Josephine Polard in New York Ledger.

An Ancient Maiden's Courtship.

She was a spinster of only two certain age. Her long, pale face was surrounded by a magnificently luxuriant red wig; her bony figure stood 5 feet 11 in. in her maidly gaiters, and her relatives had long been persuaded that only death could deprive them of her.

Mr. Jones was a dear neighbor and a mild man. When his wife fell ill, Miss Samantha was most attentive. When Mrs. Jones departed, then did the spinster recognize the rising of that tide in her affairs which was to lead her on to—Mr. Jones.

So persistently and warmly did she console the widower that he lived in an atmosphere lurid with her wig and was swallowed in the vortex of her fascinations without a murmur. From the grave she led him at once to the altar, and three hours after Mrs. Jones the first left her home for the last time Mrs. Jones the second crossed the threshold a triumphant bride.

It is recorded of the dazed bridegroom that, when asked if he would take Samantha for his wife, he answered mournfully:

"I suppose I might as well. 'Pears like the Lord'll never quit trompin on my feelings."—New York Journal.

Will Oysters.

A trawler who has eaten oysters in all lands has this to say about wild oysters: "I never want to eat better oysters than some I found growing in the trees at Station Creek, Port Royal. I used to go out before breakfast and pick enough for a feast. They were tree oysters, and I used to take a stone to dislodge them. Sounds like a yarn, but it is true every time. The tide comes in there 10 or 12 feet high, and the trees were submerged twice every 24 hours, and the oysters lodged in them. And they staid there and attracted more. When the tide went out, they were stranded high and dry, and lazy fellows like myself were glad to eat them."

Safe and Unsafely Rubbed.

Rubber articles that float in water and are elastic and soft are harmless. Black rubber dolls that are colored throughout the mass and the material of which sinks in water contain lead and are dangerous.

Red and brown rubbers contain antimony sulphide, and when colored throughout the mass are not dangerous, as the antimony does not dissolve in the saliva or in milk.

Gray rubber contains zinc oxide and is dangerous in any articles likely to be put into the mouth.

Rubber articles colored on the surface only are unsafe.—Medical News.

SATURN'S FAMOUS RINGS.

A Phenomenon Unlike Anything Else in the Whole Solar System.

Every one who has given the least attention possible to astronomical curiosities knows that Saturn presents a phenomenon to which there is nothing analogous in the whole of the solar system—two broad, flat and very thin rings being his constant attendants in his trips around the sun. Galileo first noticed a peculiarity in the appearance of this ringed planet, which he said "appeared like a large body placed between two smaller ones." Huygens first described the rings and figured them for the benefit of those not fortunate enough to own a telescope.

The breadth of these rings from the outer diameter of the larger to the inner edge of the smaller has been computed at 29,900 miles; total diameter of the outer ring, 167,000 miles, and a space of 10,000 miles is supposed to intervene between the inner edge of the small ring and the surface of the planet itself.

The composition of these rings, or, rather, this system of rings—some authors mention three and even four, although I have mentioned but two in the opening, which seems to be the number accorded by the majority of writers—is simply a matter of conjecture. Some astronomers claim that they are composed of material similar to that of the planet itself, while others are sure that "they are composed of numerous satellites (moons) mingled with vaporous matter traveling in planes."

Maxwell says, "The rings must be formed of separate particles moving around the planet as independent satellites." According to Otto Struve, observations on the rings for a period over 200 years prove beyond a doubt that they are widening, and that the lower edge of the inner one is slowly but certainly approaching the body of the planet.—St. Louis Republic.

Reading Shakespeare.

If Mr. Dana would sound the tocsin and tell men and women of all grades of life what pleasure and profit they might secure by reading Shakespeare's plays, he would be a benefactor to his race.—M. P. H. in The Tribune.

Things that are better than pleasure, more valuable than profit, they might thus secure. The soul would be illuminated, the intellect broadened, the spiritual nature exalted, the affections refined, the life dignified, the whole of the cherisherable powers of manhood or womanhood inspired and augmented. The influence of Shakespeare's genius is compelling; it permeates one and compasses all; it dealth with the visible world and the invisible, the right and the wrong, the craft and the stuff, the passions and the reason, the images of form and their shadows, the beautiful and the hateful, the specters, the chimeras and whatever else there be in space, time or fancy. We tell all men and women that there is no other one like unto Shakespeare. When he entereth the mind and taketh possession of the heart, there can be no place in the thought or in the habit for aught that is mean.—Charles A. Dana.

Russian Etiquette.

If you invite a Russian to dinner, make a point of offering him before he takes his seat at the table certain hors d'oeuvres, and above all do not forget to accompany these with a dram of spirits. The stronger the latter the higher the Russian guest will esteem his entertainer, who must pour the cognac out himself, not into a liquor glass, but into a bordeaux glass, and it is indispensable that he should drain the entire bumper to the health of his guest before the latter has time to put his glass to his lips. Each time you make a speech at dinner, or at any repast, be careful to have your glass filled to the brim before you begin speaking, and the moment you have concluded your remarks drain your glass to the very last drop at a gulp, since that if the slightest heelap remains it means in the eyes of the Russians that your remarks have been insincere.—Petite Republique Francaise.

The Irish Woman at the Bank.

An old woman of undeniable Celtic origin entered a down town savings bank the other day and walked up to the desk.

"Do you want to draw or deposit?" asked the gentlemanly clerk.

"Naw, Oi doan't. Oi want ter put some in," was the reply.

The clerk pushed up the book for her signature, and indicating the place said, "Sign on this line, please."

"Above it or below it?"

"Me whole name?"

"Yes."

"Before Oi was married?"

"No, just as it is now."

"Oi can't write."—Boston Transcript.

Khirmee Prefer the Moslem Faith.

Our Odessa correspondent says that the Russian orthodox missionaries have so failed in their proselytizing efforts among the Khirmee that the missions will probably be shortly withdrawn. Nearly the whole of the steppe tribes, generally described as "heathens," are now adopting, at "en masse," the Mohammedan faith, which is spread among them chiefly by Tartar teachers. The Mohammedan Tartars have always enjoyed the right of free proselytism among the natives of the Khirmee steppes.—London News.

KILLED HERSELF IN PUBLIC.

How a Bereaved Chinese Fiancée Ended Her Days.

Mr. Medhurst, for many years British consul at Shanghai, tells in the London Million of a singular "case of invitation" which he received in China. It was from a lady, intimating her intention to commit suicide on a specified date. She was very young and attractive and belonged to a wealthy family, but the Chinese gentleman to whom she had been affianced from childhood having died just before the date fixed for their nuptials she gave out that she deemed it her duty to render her widowhood irrevocable by dying with her betrothed. So she sent cards around to the local gentry giving notice of her purpose.

No attempt was made by her relatives or the local authorities to frustrate her design, though Mr. Medhurst appealed to the mandarins, the general opinion being that she was about to perform a meritorious act. Eventually, on the day named, the woman did deliberately sacrifice her life in the presence of thousands of spectators.

A stage was erected in the open fields, with a tented frame over it, from which was suspended a strip of scarlet crape. One end of this strip she fastened round her neck, and then, embracing a little boy presented by one of the bystanders, she mounted a chair and resolutely jumped off, her little clasped hands saluting the assemblage as her body twirled round with the tightening cord.

The woman was not hounded on by a fanatic mob, as was the practice at suttees in India, but immolation appeared to be an entirely voluntary act. Sacrifices of this kind, according to Mr. Medhurst, are not uncommon in certain districts of China, and, strange to say, they are rewarded with monuments, sometimes erected by order of the emperor.

Diet For the Aged.

I find, says a writer in The Gentleman's Magazine, that if old people are put on a good meat diet in the way of strong soup, beef tea and animal food, and only just sufficient farinaceous food and fats and sugar to maintain the heat of the body, they increase wonderfully in energy—as they often express it, feel 20 years younger. This is only natural; it is a food of energy, the food that builds up muscle, nerve and constitutional stamina.

The requirements of the system of old age, as a rule, are not very great, and more harm is done by taking too much food than by taking too little. I have known people considerably over 70 to derive the greatest benefit from a thorough change in diet. It seems to rejuvenate them. Of course in old age care should be taken that the body is not subjected to rapid changes in temperature. When the nervous power is decreasing, as the result of old age, and the system is losing power of combating cold and strain upon its energy, a stimulating diet invigorates and is conducive to maintaining constitutional stamina better than any other.

The Pronunciation of Arkansas.

I have traveled in Arkansas, and it is said there that the legal pronunciation is Arkansasaw. In the antebellum days, about the time Kansas was admitted as a free state, there was agitation in the state legislature of Arkansas in regard to the state name being mistaken by its similarity to the name of Kansas. One very zealous member of the house moved that the legal pronunciation of the state should be Arkansasaw. The proposition was seconded, and passed by a large majority.

So the story goes. To travel the state and say Arkansas and not Arkansasaw marks a person among the natives as being a tenderfoot to their soil. As a rule all southern people say Arkansasaw, and that, I believe, is why the pronunciation is still kept fresh, as I know that the schools of Kansas and the west teach the pronunciation Arkansasaw.—Baltimore Sun.

Better Health Obtaining.

The average number of days of sickness in every decade for each man is said to be only 16. Under rules of scientific hygiene and principles of health better practiced, our span of life—be this desirable or the reverse—has, by the evidence of insurance societies, considerably increased. The power of unalleviated physical pain to terrify or trouble is practically at an end with the general use of those benign anesthetics which have brought a new era of confidence to the hospital and sick room and taken away all its horror from the surgeon's knife.—Sir Edwin Arnold in Longman's Magazine.

Silence and Speech.

The chief office of silence is to bury all that is evil, and the chief office of speech is to disclose and disseminate all that is good. Let this be done with sincerity and earnestness, and let no criticism discourage it, for its ultimate benefit to character and to conduct is established beyond a doubt.—New York Ledger.

The auction sale held at the Stuart ranch near Glen Ellen last Saturday and Monday was a great success. Between one and two hundred people attended the sale and the bidding was very lively. The sale was managed by A. Leslie Cresswell, the well-known auctioneer of San Francisco, who disposed of the entire personal property on the place at remarkably good figures. The ranch was not sold.

Frank Gilbert, the champion light-weight boxer of the Pacific Coast and a member of the Olympic Club of San Francisco, was in town last Sunday. He will shortly have a four-round bout with Spider Kelley, the well-known professional boxer. The contest will come off in Sacramento. So far young Gilbert has never been defeated, although he has taken part in many glove set-to's. Frank is a Sonoma boy, having been born and raised in this place.

Glen Ellen is becoming noted for its successful trappers of varmints. Recently Frank McLaughlin, who has earned the sobriquet of "Blue Jay Frank" among the denizens of that town, and Chas. Kenley, otherwise known as "Charley, the Trapper," gathered in a large number of live coons, ringtailed cats, mink, polecats and other chicken destroyers which infest that section. A number of these have been chained around the park grounds surrounding the Mervyn Hotel, and mine host Harrison is seriously contemplating setting up a menagerie in connection with his popular resort.

HIS DEATH FORETOLD.

A Strange Story Connected With J. K. Luttrell's Death.

A strange story of remarkable coincidences, which is vouched for by one who is deeply affected by it, is told in the weathers' department of the Customs office, says the San Francisco Post. Among the employees of the Government in this department is Paul S. Luttrell, son of the late John King Luttrell of Sonoma, Fish Commissioner to Alaska and late United States Congressman, who died in Sitka on October 4th of last year.

Mr. Luttrell was a pioneer of the State and well-known throughout its entire breadth. It will be remembered by his many friends that he left San Francisco on June 15th of last year for the Alaskan Territory to assume the duties of the office to which he had just been appointed, and that is the last his family saw of him alive.

Commissioner Luttrell arrived at Sitka on his sixty-second birthday, and on the evening of that day he wrote a letter to his wife, whom he had left in Hillsburg, Or., announcing his safe arrival at his destination, but expressed a wish that he was home with his family, so that they might join with him in celebrating the advent of another year in his life. In conclusion he wrote that he had had a "big cry" and had experienced a strange feeling of sorrow.

Of course the letter did not reach Mrs. Luttrell for some weeks after, during which she had received advices of the death of her husband's father at Fort Jones, which, strangely, occurred on the same night that Commissioner Luttrell had written to his wife. He had had no means of learning of his father's death at the time he communicated to his wife, and, in fact, the first intimation he received of the sad news was when his wife's letter reached him five months later.

On the evening of October 4th last Mr. Luttrell died at Sitka. It was his brother's birthday, and on that day Samuel Luttrell went out to his ranch, a few miles from Fort Jones, where he remained overnight.

During the evening, while sitting in his farmhouse, he was suddenly startled by a noise, which he supposed was caused by something falling against the house, but an investigation revealed nothing strange about the place, and he returned to his room, where he was surprised to find lying on the floor the portrait of his brother, which had fallen from the wall, where it had been hanging for many years.

Afterward, when he learned of his brother's death, he recalled this incident, and also remembered that the portrait fell just about the hour that his brother had breathed his last in Alaska.

Nor was this the strongest coincidence attending the death of Commissioner Luttrell. It was several weeks before his family learned the news, and during this time while his wife and children were patiently awaiting some cheerful tidings from their absent father, a letter was received by the family from an intimate friend in Ruston, La.—A Mrs. Harris—who related a strange dream she had had on the evening of October 4th. "I dreamed," wrote the lady, "that your husband appeared before me and we talked for some time. Suddenly he remarked, 'I must be going; they are calling me,' and he began ascending a spiral stairway in the center of the room and disappeared. Then I awoke to find that it was all a dream."

The portrait incident, together with the one referred to by Mrs. Harris, caused some uneasiness to Mrs. Luttrell, and the lady awaited the next mail from the North with considerable apprehension of some terrible news.

When the mail did arrive it contained the sad news of Commissioner Luttrell's death, and it was after the final spells of grief which the deceased's family naturally experienced that the strange coincidences were recalled.

The time of all their occurrence was almost exactly with that of Commissioner Luttrell's death.

The Auction Sale on the Graves Place.

The amount realized at the auction sale of personal property belonging to the estate of the late Wm. H. Graves was between $800 and $900. George W. Sparks, our local auctioneer, presided over the sale. The sale was a financial success, which is more than can be said of the sale held in Napa a few weeks ago, when the horses and carriages belonging to the same estate were knocked down to the highest bidder. At that sale a double-seated carriage that cost $850 and had been in use but a few months was sold to G. S. Harris of this place for $30 and the mare Anna Belle, for which Mr. Graves paid $3,500, was knocked down to a Napa man for $430.

The Sonoma House, Harry Fisher proprietor, is a popular resort for commercial travelers.

SONOMA DAY AT THE MID-WINTER FAIR.

March 10th Selected—A Cheap Railroad Rate to and From the Fair on that Day.

Saturday, March 10th, will be Sonoma Day at the Midwinter Fair and in order that the people of the county may turn out in force the San Francisco and North Pacific Railway has made a special rate for that day and one fare only will be charged for round-trip tickets from all points in the county. The tickets will be good on Saturday and for the return trip on the following day on all trains.

For the accommodation of people residing on the Guerneville branch and north of Santa Rosa to Cloverdale a train will leave San Francisco at 5 P. M. Sunday to connect with the Guerneville branch. This is an exceedingly liberal rate and will enable the people of every section of the county to attend the Fair at small cost in so far as transportation is concerned.

Bruggy and Espey.

It is generally supposed that the pursuit of Bruggy and Espey, the escaped murderers, has been abandoned by Sheriff Allen. This is not so, however, as the Sheriff is on a still hunt after the escapes, who he claims have not yet left the county. The men are supposed to be in hiding in the vicinity of Santa Rosa, and are being looked after by friends. If this be so it is doubtful if our vigilant Sheriff will ever capture them. It is now nearly two months since they escaped from the County Jail.

The other day a dispatch was received by Sheriff Allen from Sheriff Bogard at Red Bluff stating that he thought he had Bruggy in his custody and asking him to send an officer there. The Sheriff sent Deputy Sheriff Dougherty. But when the officer reached Red Bluff he found that Sheriff Bogard had arrested the wrong man. The fellow answers the description well and is the best double of Bruggy that Mr. Dougherty has seen, but he is not the Bruggy wanted here. The Sonoma county officer speaks in high terms of the fine treatment accorded him by Sheriff Bogard. Under Sheriff Mahew and S. E. Murphy.

Human Bones Unearthed.

J. P. Weems, while engaged in excavating alongside the road leading to Weyl's quarries north of town, on Thursday last, unearthed a number of skeletons. The bones are supposed to be those Indians who fifty years ago roamed this valley by the hundreds. The tribe is now extinct if we except about fifteen who have become partly civilized and are living on the Carriage and other ranches in this vicinity.

Held to Answer to a Charge of Murder.

Mrs. Mary J. Fowler and Mrs. Elizabeth Bryan and John Bryan, the sixteen-year-old son of the former, have been held to answer to a charge of murder. The accused will be confined in the Santa Rosa jail until their trial takes place, which will be some time next month.

Death of Jacob Simon.

Jacob Simon died on his farm near this place last Monday of dropsy. He had resided in this valley for many years and was well and favorably known. The deceased was a native of Germany and aged 57 years. He leaves a wife but no children. The remains were interred in Mountain Cemetery last Wednesday in the presence of a large number of friends and acquaintances.

City Election.

Under the new law candidates must file their certificates of nomination with the City Clerk at least thirty days before election, else they will be barred off the ticket.

It must be a good article that will induce a man to go forty miles to get it. Mr. E. R. Swetnam of Fairfax Station, Va., says a party came forty miles to his store for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and bought a dozen bottles. "The remedy is a great favorite in this vicinity," he says "and has performed some wonderful cures here." It is intended especially for Coughs, Colds, Croup and Whooping Cough. For sale by all dealers.

All councils are invited to participate and they should make a special effort to be present in order to make the affair a grand success.

The longest continuous cataplectic sleep known to medical science was reported from Germany in the spring of 1892, the patient—a Silesian miner—having remained absolutely unconscious for a period of four and a half months. The doctors in attendance could not report any thing in the way of symptoms which would suggest that there was something out of the ordinary in the man's slumbers, excepting a complete rigidity of the limbs. One peculiarity which was much commented upon was that the hair grew naturally during the whole of the extended nap, but his beard remained perfectly stationary and lifeless.

The Sonoma Valley Band, which gave a concert in Petaluma last fall, says the Petaluma Courier, will probably appear there again some time during the coming spring.

"The meanest man I ever heard of," said Mr. Jason, "was a fellow that lived in the same township with me and wanted an education. So he set to work and courted the schoolmarm for two years, and when she taught him all she knew he gave her the shake and went to practicing law." — Indianapolis Journal.

A pleasant surprise party was held last Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goess on Second-street East. The party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cook in honor of their brother Mr. Chas. Cook. The Goess residence was handsomely decorated for the occasion with tall ferns and flowers. Dancing was the principal feature of amusement throughout the evening. At 12 o'clock all were invited into the large dining room where a sumptuous repast was served, after which dancing was renewed interspersed with singing and recitations by Miss Ella Simmons. The festivities continued until an early hour in the morning when all departed for their homes highly pleased with the evening's amusements. The following were those present: Mr. and Mrs. Chas. The Woodland Democrat narrates the following exploit of Elmer Zane, a Sonoma boy, who is now a resident of Yolo county: Yesterday was not a day that most persons would select as a time to plunge into the cold and muddy torrent of Cache Creek, but such an idea got possession of Superintendent Zane of the Yolo orchard, and he proceeded to put it into execution. He mounted a horse and endeavored to stem the swift current. The horse not being used to the water had no sooner got beyond its depth than it began to plunge in a frantic manner and all attempts of the rider to manage the frightened animal proved unavailing. The animal kept plunging and suddenly both rider and horse disappeared from sight, being under what was considered a long while Mr. Zane, finding it useless to try to cross with that horse, returned to shore and secured a fresh one, but with the same result as before. Then, somewhat chagrined by the ineffectual attempts to cross in that manner, he expressed the opinion that he could swim the stream himself. Leaping in, he swam out to where the current was rather swift, but the span of water before him seemed to cool his rash impulse, as he returned to the bank and remarked that he thought it best to abandon any further attempts at that time.

SONOMA INDEX - TRIBUNE.

SONOMA, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1894.

HE MADE AN IMPRESSION.

But He Won't Be In a Hurry to Repeat the Experiment.

An up town resident was taught a lesson the other day. He is in the habit of ogling all the pretty girls he sees, no matter where he meets them. He particularly likes to get in a car that is filled with fair young women. Then he pulls down his vest, straightens his tie and eyes each one of the people he is sure he is going to charm. He settles in his mind which one he will make the most impression on, and then makes her as uncomfortable as possible.

The other day he saw a fair creature sitting opposite him who looked quite coy. He pulled himself together to make himself more handsome and striking. She smiled, just a faint, flitting little smile, but he knew he had made an impression. They exchanged glances all the way up Ridge avenue.

Finally the young lady signaled the conductor to stop the car. The would be masher had to get off at the same corner. He started to walk down the block to his house with the young lady a few steps in front of him. Imagine his utter amazement when he saw her walk up the steps to his own house.

"Did she recognize me, and is she going to tell my wife?" he asked himself in an agonized way. "Who can she be?"

Finally, after walking past the door so often that he was afraid all the neighbors would notice it, he saluted. His wife greeted him as usual. Evidently there had been no whisper in her ears about his conduct. He was about plucking up courage, when his fair vis-a-vis of the car entered—with a smoking dish. He never looked up from his plate.

"How do you like my new girl?" came softly from the mistress of the house.

"She's lovely," he managed to say, but he resolved that next time he would be more careful in his flirtations.—Philadelphia Press.

"Chauncey Dewey."

In one of the up town stores one of the girls who sits up aloft and dispatches money to the cashier by way of the brass tubes is known to her companions by the endearing name of "Chauncey Dewey." The reason is not very clear. Perhaps she has a gift for humorous speechmaking. At any rate, when the little blue aproned cashgirls wish to attract her attention, they stand in front of the counter and chant in song fashion: "Chauncey, Chauncey, Chauncey Dewey, Chauncey, Chauncey, Chauncey Dewey." Then she acknowledges their salutation and answers their requests amid much giggling. The other day a woman of inquiring mind asked one of the clerks to explain the reason for this pseudonym.

"Huh!" said the young woman. "Why do you cash girls call the girl up there Chauncey Dewey?" repeated the questioner.

"Oh, I dunno," replied the clerk differently. "It's some French phrase they've got for her, but I dunno what it means."—New York World.

Alumination.

"There is an erroneous idea with reference to aluminum," a professor said. "While it is true that alumina is present in all clay and nearly all our country rocks, there is no process known for extracting it from clay as a practical commercial proposition. The obstacle not yet overcome is the presence of silica, which is reduced as a metal with the aluminum, rendering it brittle and unfit for use.

"All the aluminum produced for commercial purposes is from cryolite and bauxite, the former coming from Greenland and the latter from the Alleghany mountains and other places. Cryolite is a mineral having the appearance of alum. Bauxite is a brown mineral resembling fine sandstone."—Spokane Review.

A Kind Hearted Physician.

Few men were kinder hearted than Sir Andrew Clark, and it is not too much to say of him that a good third of his patients never paid a penny for his advice through long years of illness. A lady who taught music once went to him about her daughter, who was in a very delicate state. She deposited 10 shillings as she was about to leave, saying, "That is all I have." Sir Andrew Clark rose, and going to his desk wrote out a check for £25, and treated her child gratuitously until she was restored to health. In this manner he used to do a great deal of unostentatious good, and he will be missed by many poor patients.—London World.

Smoking and Infection.

"I used to smoke, and I always made a point of smoking in cases of cholera and in every other kind of infectious disease, when I could manage it, and especially when attending patients in the hospital or on board ship."

"You regard it, then, as a thorough disinfectant?"
"No, not as a thorough disinfectant, but it is a disinfectant. It has some power, and especially if a person has not a good square meal inside him. Then it has an effect in warding off an infectious disease."

"I should have thought that smoking, tending to depress the nervous system, would have laid the smoker open to the infection."

"Yes, you must remember I have spoken of a man with whom smoking does not disagree. A good deal depends on the idiosyncrasy of the person who smokes. If he cannot stand smoking well, then it may depress his heart action and enfeeble his constitution, and so lessen the infectious power to throw off the infectious germs. But on broad, general grounds, I am decidedly of opinion, from my own experience and observation, that tobacco smoking—other things being equal—does give any one exposed to infection a considerable amount of immunity. And then, smoking has a disinfectant power on the microbes themselves. The smoke being retained in the mouth is a sort of disinfecting filter through which the germs have to pass, and some of them certainly are destroyed or at least deprived of their vitality."—Dr. Norman Kerr interviewed.

Gas Versus Theology.

One of the oldest mistakes that ever occurred, it is safe to say, in Chicago or anywhere else, happened to a South Side druggist, Mr. J. H. Hogey. His servant, Bridget, was washing the steps of his house on Vernon avenue. Along came an employee of the gas company, who wished to enter the house to read the gas meter. He had a thick book under his arm, in which he was wont to register the figures of the various meters which he examines. Unfortunately he is an Englishman, with a pronounced cockney accent, and Bridget is not overbright. This is what the inspector said as he took his book from under his arm: "Good morning, madam. Ah would like to read the gas bill." This is what Bridget said:

"I've to cuke the breakfast an have no time now to listen to the gospel." "But it's me juty, my good woman, I must read the gas bill, and you must let me. Allow me to enter." "Devil a step," said Bridget. "Come again, when I've no worruk, I'll listen to yer gospel."

To make a long story short, the man couldn't make Bridget understand him, and he didn't understand her and reported to the company that he was not allowed to look at the gas meter, and the company took the meter out of the house before the mistake was found.—Boston Transcript.

Waiting For Dead Men's Shoes.

Waiting for dead men's shoes is an old proverbial expression and in connection with army officers and their wives still has a remarkable significance. Said an officer's wife a few evenings since: "I do dislike to take up an army register and scan the personals to see if any one outranking the captain is ill or to keep an eye upon the old officers and figure out when they will be retired. But I'm not as bad as some others. Why, they get life insurance tables and study mortality probabilities to see when an officer may be promoted by reason of death among officers out ranking him. If some officers die as they should according to rule, the captain will be a general before he is 60 years old. Isn't it a mean business to think about? But we get paid back, for when my husband is old all the rank and file will be indulging in the same kind of speculation and wondering why old General Blank doesn't die."—Cincinnati Tribune.

When You Think Not.

This anecdote is told of Rev. Mr. Kidd, a Scotch minister, who was very eccentric and had his own way of doing things. "Just as the year was opening," says one of his parishioners, "I was very busy in my shop, when, right in the midst of my work, in stepped the parson. 'Did you expect me?' was his abrupt inquiry, without ever giving or waiting for a salutation. 'No, sir,' was my reply, 'I did not.' 'What if I had been death?' he asked, in a solemn, earnest tone, and out he stepped as he had come and was gone almost before I knew it."—Exchange.

A Talking Device.

"I never saw any one so fussy as they are at the Tower of London. When we went there to see the crown jewels, they wouldn't let us take in our satchels or cameras or anything." "Why, of course they wouldn't. You could have taken the jewels easier with your camera than with anything else."—Newport News.
